

SCREENAFRICA™

BROADCAST, FILM, TV, COMMERCIALS, NEW MEDIA & TECHNOLOGY NEWS

SUBSCRIBE TO OUR NEWSLETTER ▶

You are in : Editorial News > Television-TV

TELEVISION-TV NEWS

« go back

First ever homegrown Hausa-language channel now on air

PRINT ARTICLE

Mon, 02 Feb 2015 14:37

Like  Tweet

4

AREWA24's daily breakfast show Gari Ya Waye

On 28 June 2014 the first ever indigenously produced 24-hour channel catering to Hausa-speaking people launched in northern Nigeria.

Available free-to-air on the Nilesat platform, AREWA 24 ('arewa' is Hausa for 'north'), is a lifestyle and entertainment channel offering a variety of programming, with a significant contingent of original, Hausa-language productions across genres.

The channel came into being with the backing of American funds, the result of a grant awarded to San Francisco-based non-governmental organisation, Equal Access International, which exists to stimulate positive social change by delivering and facilitating access to media and technology in underserved regions of the world.

"The goal was simple," says the channel's president Jacob Arback. "Create a television platform and voice in Hausa through which northern Nigerians could tell their own stories in their own voices and celebrate their own music, film and local culture and build an original production capability for the long term."

AREWA 24 is family-focused and has placed particular emphasis on youth culture, expressed through chat, magazine, music and sports programmes, as well as soap operas and music shows.

Although set up with US backing, the channel's content is produced for and about northern Nigerians, as well as Hausa speakers in the surrounding countries. While the channel is only a few months old, it already produces 10 original shows. These include, among others: the daily morning show Gari Ya Waye (Daybreak); the primetime drama series Dadin Kowa, produced entirely in-house and launched on 24 January; the sport show Jaruman Wasanni; Kundin Kannywood, which focuses on the northern Nigerian film industry, nicknamed 'Kannywood', (setting it apart from the predominantly English and Yoruba-language Nollywood, based in and around Lagos); and a culture show called Waiwaye.

EDITORIAL SECTION BANNER

MOST READ

(Last 14 Days)

- »e.tv calls for eKasi scripts
- »SABC Education and NEMISA bursaries
- »Botswana filmmaker produces TV series on high profile Africans
- »'Ayanda' to open Durban International Film Festival
- »Starz Play announces content licensing deal with CBS Studios International

SCREEN AFRICA DIGITAL ISSUE

Open publication - Free publishing

News Archive

- Zee World delivers on first month ratings
- Africans in focus
- Localised BET channel to feature on DStv Premium
- M-Net creates a new home for international content on DStv Compact
- French speaking African news channel to air in Canada
- Exset to discuss pay-TV monetisation at CABSAT
- Pat Pillai leaves e.tv for youth development
- Umilo premieres this March on e.tv
- Noleen Maholwana Sangqu hangs up her 3Talk shoes
- Goodness and heroics prevails at the South African box office
- Kanal D: Bringing Turkey to Africa Compiled
- Stick 'em up!
- Making every penny pack a punch
- Two days left until Presenter Search on 3 kicks off
- Bona Retsang gives SA youth a voice
- First ever homegrown Hausa-language channel now on air
- A+E Networks commissions SA version of reality wedding format
- The taste of a mother's love
- Searle Street Post creates time-lapse sequence for new Liberty TVC
- Fine-tuned audience foreplay

The advent of AREWA24 is good news, not only for television viewers in the region but also for the creative and technical professionals employed by the channel.

"In order to staff the channel we have hired professionals from the Hausa film industry, from the local television industry, as well as bright, talented university mass communication graduates," Arback explains. "What we ultimately found was that there were plenty of young, creative and wholly dedicated talent already in the market and just looking for the opportunity to use their skills. We now have 56 northern Nigerian executive producers, editors, on-air talent, finance professionals, field producers, translators, writers, directors, camera operators, sound technicians and others, who are building a highly competitive television channel."

Despite the problems of setting up a new channel and the added infrastructural and security challenges presented by operating in Nigeria's troubled north, AREWA24's initial success has exceeded expectations. The channel's success is proof of the hunger that exists across the continent for homegrown content, in indigenous languages and that is drawn from and speaks to local cultures.

RELATED ARTICLES

« go back

EMAIL TO FRIEND SHARE

0 Comments

Screen Africa

Login

Share

Sort by Newest

Comment input field

SITEMAP

NEWS

- » Editors Comments
» Latest News
» Television-TV
» Film
» Commercials
» New Media
» Radio
» Business-Policy-Legislation
» Festivals - Awards - Events
» Training & Courses
» Company News Releases
» Tracking Technology
» 4K and Ultra HD
» Animation & Graphics
» Film, TV & Video Production
» Post-Production Equipment
» Storage & Asset Management
» Audio & Accessories
» Cameras & Accessories

DIRECTORY

- » SEARCH ALL
» VIEW ALL CATEGORIES
» Africa Contacts
» Corporate & Event Production & Related Services
» Equipment Suppliers for Broadcast, Film & Video
» Facilities & Rentals for Film, Television & Commercials
» Production Companies for Film, TV & Commercials
» Radio Stations & Related Services
» Services for Film, Television, Commercials & Stills
» Organisations
» Training Centres

EVENTS

- » Local
» International
» SA Film & TV Awards
» Festival and Markets

REPORTS

- » Gauteng Production Guide
» Film & Production Locations
» Films Shot In SA
» Stars Who Have Shot In SA
» Facilities And Equipment
» Film Commissions Offices
» Incentives For Filming In SA
» A to Z Of Usefull Information
» Regulations And Rates

ADVERTISE

- » Annual Print Directory
» Magazine
» Online

JOBS

- » Jobs Offered